

About Beach Seafood Market

Owner Dennis Henderson has worked in Florida's shrimp industry since he was a boy unloading boats for the fish houses. His father was a welder who worked on docks and boats; as he grew, he followed his father's example and started his own boat welding and repair business.

In time he and two partners began buying their own boats. They named their enterprise Trico Shrimp and spent years going back and forth to Texas for shrimp, unloading their catch at fish houses. (In 1980 the third partner was bought out.) When St. George Packing went up for sale, Dennis Henderson and George Gala bought everything, the building, waterfront property, and Beach Seafood & Gulf Shrimp.

His first restaurant – Skip One on 41 – was named after a fishing boat owned by the market's original owner back in the 60s. Today the restaurant owes its popularity to the harvest of its owner's fleet.

When Henderson saw the Sandy Butler Market availability it was a match made in ... Fort Myers Beach. The market, restaurant and bar were perfect, as is the location for residents and guests of South Fort Myers, Sanibel, Fort Myers Beach, Estero and Lover's Key. It was time to grow.

Today Henderson's new Beach Seafood Market adjoins his new restaurant and bar – Skip One Seafood – in a soaring Key West-style building on San Carlos Blvd. in Fort Myers Beach.

Fort Myers Beach Natural Shrimp

Dennis Henderson knows seafood. He and his partner own the biggest Natural Shrimp boat fleet in Florida. Their trawlers unload nearby, at their Fort Myers Beach packing house.

This may be your first taste of fresh, Natural Shrimp.

About 85% of the shrimp Americans eat is pond raised and chemically treated, imported from Asian or South American locations. It's NOT inspected in the U.S., is not liable to U.S. health and quality codes and the flavor does not compare to fresh wild caught.

It's frequently served in waterfront locations and 70 to 80% of restaurants mislabel.

Wild caught Florida shrimp is known as "pink gold;" it's natural, fresh and flash frozen right out of the nets. The flavor is salty/sweet, and the texture is appealing. Unlike other seafood, you can freeze, thaw and refreeze shrimp with no loss of flavor.
